Fears of Another Major Flood Disaster Begin Now to Fade

DROP AT PITTSBURGH

Stony Creek River Continues To Fall at Johnstown Despite Rain

Flood Facts

Fears of another major flood disaster began to fade today as reports from crucial flood points indicated a cessation in the rise of rivers swollen by spring rains.

At Pittsburgh, the scene of the disastrous St. Patrick's Day flood of last year, the river at the "point" where the Allegheny and the Monongahela meet to form the Ohio river, reached a height of 35.1 feet, more than 10 feet above the official danger zone, and then began dropping steadily at the rate of three-tenths feet an hour.

Prepared by earlier visits of its turbulent rivers, the Pittsburgh merchants in the city's famed "Golden Triangle" were prepared for the new emergency, and escaped with comparatively little damage.

At Johnstown, the "flood city," the Stony Creek River continued to fall despite steady rain during the night.

At Wheeling, West Virginia, fears of another flood disaster passed as the whirling Ohio river faltered in its rise after reaching a crest of 45.8 feet at 1 a. m. An hour later there was no increase in the next reading. The crest last January was 48.7.

In Maryland, Virginia, District of Columbia area, the situation was not as acute as before. Although all fears of rising waters had not yet passed, the historic Rappahannock continued to fall back within its banks.

Nineteen were counted dead from the flood, four in Pennsylvania, four in Ontario, four in Ohio, two in West Virginia and eight in Virginia.

LONDON, Ontario, Apr. 28—(INS)—The worst flood in the history of Ontario province swept through London towards the cities of Thamesville, Wardsville and Chatham today, after leaving five persons dead and property damage of $3,000,000 in this section.

New rains caused a rise in the two rivers at Ingersoll, above London, but waters here had receded late yesterday and it was believed the Thames here could hold the new flood waters without further property loss.

In London, between six thousand and ten thousand persons were homeless because of the floods, carved by the new heavy rains.

Fog hung low over the city this morning, and weathermen believed the downpours had ended.

WASHINGTON, Apr. 28—(INS)—Barricaded by sand-bag dikes hurriedly erected during the night by 1700 CCC, WPA and Capitol Parks workers, the nations' capitol was ready today to combat the crest of the Potomac river flood.

Officials said dikes will prevent the waters from inundating streets near the water front. The downtown section, where the White House and government buildings are located, were not in danger. The river is expected to reach high water mark during the day.

New Reapportionment Bill Is Finally Introduced By Senator Rodgers

WOULD AFFECT BUCKS

By Tony S. Smith
L. N. S. Staff Correspondent

HARRISBURG, Apr. 28—(INS)—Bucks County was one of the few senatorial districts affected in the administration's new reapportionment bill. Long awaited by Democrats and Republicans, the bill to "re-scrabble" districts according to the 1930 census was finally introduced by Sen. William D. Rodgers, D., Allegheny.

In the reconstruction of districts Bucks County would be consolidated with Lehigh; Fulton County would be added to the Franklin-Adams district; Adams and Lackawanna would each gain an additional member in the upper chamber, one district would be carved out of Lancaster County, and Lebanon and Dauphin counties would be consolidated.

There had been some tale when the measure was not forthcoming for many week that the administration had decided to pass up the controversial issue by holding off to see what the 1940 census of Pennsylvania's population would do to the various districts. In the House, the bill to reapportion the legislative districts—a much touchier task—was still in an incomplete stage.

There was more action in the House Monday night than at any other time during the present session. Most of the hubbub was occasioned by special order considerations of two highly debatable measures—the Arnold bill providing for a permanent milk control set-up for the Commonwealth and the Moomaw-Moran bill to centralize tax collecting systems for counties, thus doing away with the office of tax collector or placing his duties in the

A Woodpecking Pair Prefers Pecking Metal

HULMEVILLE, Apr. 28—There is a woodpecker in this borough who seems to be a little cuckoo.

In fact there are two who have caused residents to scratch their heads time and again, for this year the "cuckoo" woodpecker brought a mate to this climate with him, and now the two of them are acting in the strangest manner.

The strange part of the story is that the two red-heads don't seem to know the difference between wood and metal, and daily, for periods of a half-hour or more, they beat out a rat-a-tat on the protective metal covering of the fire siren atop the station of William Penn Fire Company.

It seems to be a habit now, and residents near the fire station watch daily for the "cuckoo" woodpeckers who don't seem to realize the futility of pecking away at metal.

The visit to the fire siren is paid at least once a day, and the early risers make the morning air reverberate with their bill-tapping exercises. Then perhaps later in the day they will pay another visit, or probably two. The fire siren has a great attraction for these two, and whether they are bent on the mischief of eventually sounding the siren, no one is sure.

Last Summer the red-headed fellow made his home in a woodland plot on the Bensalem Township side of the Neshaminy Creek, and frequently fed the quarter-mile to the fire station for his noisy exercise. When he returned this Spring he had a mate, and now has company on his flights over this borough.

Only the noise is twice as great now, as the rat-a-tat begins each day, and can be heard a block away.

ROBES AND OTHER CEREMONIAL VESTMENTS CLAIMED TO BE WITHOUT PEER WILL ADORN KING GEORGE AND QUEEN ELIZABETH OF ENGLAND AT THE CORONATION

Royal Dress Will Outshine Everything Else In Magnificence

LONDON, Apr. 28—Robes and other ceremonial vestments claimed to be without a peer will adorn King George VI. and Queen Elizabeth of England when they are crowned in Westminster Abbey here on May 12.

Based on models handed down from medieval times, and embroidered with historical emblems similar to those which have decorated the ceremonial dress of English kings and queens for many centuries, the royal dress will outshine everything else in magnificence.

It is a matter of record that the coronation ceremonial demands that the Queen takes a secondary position to her husband—her throne is lower than that of the King's, her crowning comes after his, for example. But in the richness and beauty of her coronation dress she will easily eclipse her escort.

She will take her place beside the King in robes which will be an exact copy, except for minor details, of those worn by queens of England for more than 500 years. Her gown will pay little attention to modern fashion, and will reach to her ankles.

The finest and richest materials procurable—gossamer—fine velvet, shimmering white satin, the best quality ermine, and centuries old Irish lace—are going into the making of the robe, the surcoat, and the gown.

Many yards of velvet, woven entirely by hand at the rate of three yards a week and specially dyed to the exact shade of true royal purple, will be in the robe and the train attached to it.

The robe and train will be lined with ermine, with each tiny white skin having the black tail of the animal. Many hundreds of the skins have been used, the lining being slightly larger than the robe and train, so that it makes a magnificent border of ermine.

The robe will be one and a half

ONE MAN KILLED AND ONE HURT IN CRASH

John H. Oler, Philadelphia, Is Fatally Injured When His Car Swerves Into Pole

WM. HAMPTON INJURED

DOYLESTOWN, April 28—One man was killed and another injured yesterday afternoon when their car swerved into a pole on the Lackawanna Trail about four miles south of here.

The dead:

John H. Oler, 60, 1119 North 63rd street, Philadelphia.

The injured:

William Hampton, 58, Lansdowne. Broken leg and possible skull fracture.

Both men were on their way to interview a client concerning a property sale. Oler was driving the car when the accident occurred.

Oler died as he was being placed in an ambulance from the Doylestown Hospital. He had been removed from the wreckage by a passing motorist. Dr. S. B. Hadden, of Philadelphia, who, upon examination of the victim, attributed the sudden collapse to heart failure.

The body was taken to a morgue where it was identified through personal papers. Dr. H. Clayton Moyer, coroner of Bucks county, viewed the body at the morgue and substantiated the opinion of Dr. Hadden that the accident was caused when Oler was stricken with heart failure.

Word was sent to the dead man's family in Philadelphia by Dr. Moyer regarding the possibility of an autopsy. State Highway Patrolman Joseph Jacobo, of Doylestown, is investigating the accident.

Oler was head of the firm of John H. Oler & Son, Inc., 5114 Market street, Philadelphia. Hampton is reported to be a salesman of the real estate brokerage. He was taken to the Abington Memorial Hospital.

And over the whole length of the train will be national emblems, richly embroidered in white and gold thread and a little diamante. The emblems will include the Tudor rose of England, the thistle of Scotland, the Shamrock of Ireland, the Star of India and that country's lotus lily, all bordered with a scroll design incorporating English oak leaves and acorns.

The whole will comprise between 50 and 60 square feet of rich embroidery, with the Queen's monogram, a large "E", and a royal crown above as the centerpiece.

The robe and train will appear to be suspended from the Queen's shoulders by eight knotted gold cords, but actually it will be fastened to the gown underneath it by strong hooks.

The weight of the whole robe will be so great that even a man of strong physique could not possibly carry it alone, and for this reason six train-

"WHAT CAN WE EAT?" QUESTION OF THE DAY

Every Householder is Troubled By Age-Old Question Day After Day

TO ANSWER QUESTION

One of the necessities for a cooking school is explained by the variation in a short-question familiar to every home. Mr. Householder wants to know: "When do we eat?" whereas Mrs. Householder asks plaintively, "What can we eat?"

Recognizing the temptation to slump into a rut in meal-planning, the Courier is bringing fresh incentive and brand-new ideas through the four sessions of a free institute for homemakers on May 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th in lecture room of the Bristol M. E. Church.

Here, a nationally-known authority on foods and homemaking, Edna M. Ferguson, will go into conference nightly with her eager classes on subjects important to every housekeeper. These wide-awake sessions automatically solve that ever-present problem of serving "the same old thing," says Miss Ferguson.

Even before the entertaining demonstration starts, the daily recipe sheets suggest new dishes so tempting that the very thought of eating them is an immediate appetizer. Then comes a constant succession of helpful cookery hints and suggested disguises for standard foods, all presented understandingly by the alert lecturer, while she is busy on the fascinating kitchen-laboratory platform.

While a fluffy cake is in the hot oven, giving forth its tantalizing fragrance, Miss Ferguson takes time to explain the advantages of the immaculate equipment in her model kitchen. Every homemaker is interested in the latest developments designed to simplify her daily duties, Miss Ferguson finds, and everything in use on the platform—from measuring spoons and mixing bowls to the shining ranges and noiseless, economical refrigerators, is inventoried by the battery of watching eyes.

An index of this keen attention is found in the constructive questions which are sent to the platform on slips conveniently attached to the printed recipe sheet. Miss Ferguson will reserve time daily to answer all written questions.

Many firms are joining forces with the Courier in making possible the four free sessions of the school.

Admission is absolutely free. Notebooks and pencils are needed, not tickets. The doors will be open early for the back-to-school rush, starting Tuesday evening, May 4th.

He said the car overturned and that he crawled from the wreckage and picked up his baby who was riding in the car together with other members of the family.

"I talked to the defendant Strouse after the accident and he said that the accident was his fault," Davis testified. "Strouse said that he would take care of the damages."

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 1937

THE DAY OF RECKONING!

The remorse that inevitably comes upon the heels of profligacy is now pretended by the Roosevelt Administration. The Roosevelt message to Congress on the relief and the budget admits what every intelligent person has known for four years: That placing inexperienced men in charge of a Nation's finances with the resultant wanton waste and political use of billions of borrowed money that will have to be repaid by the taxpayers, smells to Heaven.

To call a Roosevelt message a "budget" message is so funny it would arouse hysterical mirth, were it not for the fact that every one of us must help to pay the piper the rest of our lives. The Nation has not had a budget for four years; it has had, instead, a spending spree of proportions unparalleled in the history of the world.

The Administration's critics are given a large opportunity. The President is compelled to acknowledge his estimates of the Government's revenues, upon which the income side of his January budget was based, were more than $500,000,000 too high.

Consequently, this fiscal year, ending June 30, is to be another in the series of seven recording deficits. The amount now estimated for this year's deficit is $2,557,000,000, or $300,000,000 more than the January figure. For next fiscal year, when the President had hoped to balance the budget, his new figures indicate a deficiency of $418,000,000.

Then he gives Congress this stern admonition:

"While I recognize many opportunities to improve social and economic conditions through Federal action, I am convinced that the success of our whole program and the permanent security of our people demand that we adjust all expenditures within the limits of my budget estimates."

Thus is the More Abundant Life to be postponed. Thus is another "breathing spell" to be unwillingly granted until the Federal Octopus can decide whose money to steal next in the form of taxes for its un-American activities.

The full meaning is signified by the fact that New Deal proposals in Congress for new spending total over 16 billions. The President would seem to have cast out of the window slum clearances, large aids to farm tenants, educational and library subsidies, the most ambitious flood and drought control plans, etc. But he adheres to $1,500,000,000—$12 for every man, woman and child—for another 12 months of relief.

Congress has been showing a wholesome disposition to cut expenditures such a message is of the sort due in the House and Senate, if it really is meant to throw the President's powerful support behind real efforts to stop extravagance. It was made very clear, shockingly so from the political standpoint, that studies of the tax structure are under way which are destined to bear fruit next January on the eve of the 1938 elections, in recommendations for new taxes. The New Deal "joy ride" is ended!

A 12-year-old at Cambridge (Mass.) sold a baby buggy he found outside a store. One must begin this young, as the average car thief is washed up at 20.

Eighty million pounds of powder and lipstick are used by American womankind in a year. It runs into almost as much money as saving dictator's face.

Robes Without Peer To Adorn Royalty at British Coronation

bearers, three on each side, will support it by means of looped ribbons under the supervision of the Mistress of the Robes, as the Queen moves up the nave of the abbey and later when she kneels before the altar in prayer with the King.

Over the robe her Majesty will wear an ermine cape, falling to about 18 inches from the shoulders.

Under the robe will be a surcoat, or kirtle, also of royal purple velvet, with the sleeves turned up above the elbow and bordered with ermine.

Her gown will be of the richest pure white satin, of formal princess lines, with short sleeves and a little chemisette of gold Irish lace.

The skirt will reach just to the Queen's ankles, showing her white kid shoes, which will be decorated with gold and silver thread.

The gown will be intricately embroidered in white and gold thread, with an all over design, again with the national emblems; a repetition of the design on the robe but this time incorporating the heather of her Majesty's native country, the maple leaf of Canada, and the wattle of Australia in addition to the other emblems.

Nearly a dozen different tones and types of gold thread will be used for working the design to produce varieties of tone, and a little diamante will be skillfully introduced to add color and glitter to the effect.

Each emblem will be about two inches high, and will be so intricate that it will take two days of skilled work to complete.

Around her Majesty's neck will be a magnificent collar of diamonds from the State collection, in addition to triple ropes of pearls. Other diamonds and emeralds will adorn her corsage, while the blue dash of the Order of the Garter, decorated at the shoulder with a white silk bow, will complete her ensemble.

The robe to be worn by King George will be the same as that made at the Royal School of Needlework in 1902 for King Edward VII.

For weeks past expert needlewomen have been going over it inch by inch, fastening down loose threads and re-working worn embroidery.

Of blood-red velvet, furred with ermine, it is embroidered all over with colored emblems, incorporating in repetitive form the Tudor rose of England, green shamrocks, triple thistles, and silver eagles.

Beneath the robe he will wear a short jacket of crimson silk, velvet knee-breeches, and silk stockings.

During the actual crowning ceremony, the King first takes off his robe and is re-robed in the Colobium Sindonis, a sort of long white surplice resembling the ancient dress of the English bishops, made of white cambric and laced at the neck.

Next the golden imperial mantle, a close pall of cloth of gold, made for George IV's crowning, and embroidered with magnificent heraldic insignia, is placed on him, and it is in this dress that the King is crowned.

After the crowning, when their Majesties go to St. Edward's Chapel before the return procession drive to the royal palace, they both put on imperial mantles of royal purple velvet.

Note: Succeeding articles will follow at intervals and will deal with the robes and coronets to be worn by the peers and peeresses, will describe the decorations along the procession route, the State processions to and from the abbey, the foreign delegations to the crowning, and the national festivities celebrating the event.—INS.

SAFEST STOPPING

ANY CAR EVER HAD... ANOTHER No. 1 FEATURE OF AMERICA'S No. 1 CARS

1 "Best hydraulics I ever saw!" Zipping along at 40, Bill Burgess steps lightly on the brake pedal as the No. 1 Car crosses a line on the pavement. Duo-Automatic Hydraulic Brakes by Hudson bring the car to a stop in record time. "Measure it," says the dealer. "Wow! Only 69 feet, 7 inches... less than half the distance legally allowed!"

2 "Now disconnect those hydraulics!" And back they go over the same route, for a special test with hydraulics purposely cut off. What! No brakes at all? Wait and see. Again, as they come to the line, Bill puts his foot down... and again, a quick, smooth stop. The same foot pedal did the trick. No fumbling for the emergency brake!

3 "Three separate braking systems!" Only Hudson and Terraplane have brakes like these. Big, powerful hydraulics... with a safety reserve braking system operating from the same foot pedal if ever needed. Plus a third system in the handy parking brake up at the instrument board... with extra easy finger-touch release.

CHAPTER XXV

Vinckers hesitated for a moment, then turned on his heel and went back into the house. Isobel asked: "Why that, Sandy? Why not hear what the brute has to say?"

"I shan't treat with a crook. Tell me something, did he steal the will out of the safe?"

"I don't think so. The will was never of any good to them."

"And you feel pretty safe about the jewels?"

"I no longer believe this crowd has them. Uncle probably took them with him, or hid them somewhere."

"I think it likely that Vinckers knows where the Colonel is," Sandy said. "I found his watch, or at least Mouse did, beside the path where it goes down steeply just inside the cove. He must have fallen and lost it there. I thought he had followed you, but now I believe he followed the Colonel. Will you do something for me, Isobel?"

"That depends."

"I want you to go out aboard my boat for the night. It's very necessary that I should talk to the Colonel, and talk to him alone. But I can't leave you unprotected here. Blackmail is not all that Vinckers is after."

"I don't think you need bother, Sandy. Uncle is apt to be here pretty soon."

"You told Mike to bring him back?"

"I sent him word that Vinckers had tried to kill you, and was apt to try again. My room is in the front, overhead. I heard that shot, and I heard what you said to Vinckers, down on the pier. It was enough."

"Do you think I acted properly?"

"Oh, I suppose so," Isobel said wearily. "Might as well turn their own weapons against them."

"The criminal experts say that nothing more gets the goat of a framer-up than to find himself framed," Sandy said. "Crooks seem to feel that they've got a moral copyright on crooked stuff. They expect it from the police, of course, because the police are professionals and not bound by any written laws of amateur sportsmanship. But for a rank outsider, peaceful citizen and gentleman player to spring the sort of stuff that I did isn't cricket, from the crook's viewpoint."

"Then you're not certain that it was Vinckers who shot at you?" Isobel asked.

"I'm certain enough, though I have no positive proof. It was already too dark. So I called on my quartermaster to perjure himself and he responded like a little man. That set Vinckers back with a jolt, the more so as I let him understand that I had a full crew of perjurers entirely at my command. Unsportsmanly, perhaps, but no more the less efficient. It puts a tight game law on me here, and my safety is vitally necessary to your own."

"Well, let's hope it holds him," Isobel said. She turned and looked out across the deep purple water. "Our cruiser was due here this evening, but as there's no sign of her the chances are against her coming until tomorrow evening. The captain doesn't like to cut across the shoals at night unless there's a calm and a moon. Then you can see the coral-heads you might strike."

"It doesn't matter greatly does it?" Sandy asked.

"I've thought that we might order them off the island. Make them go aboard the boat and have them taken to Nassau... or even to Miami. But perhaps it would be better to wait until they show their hands."

"I think so," Sandy agreed. "Better not force them until we know just what they are after. That's apt to happen at any moment; Vinckers is getting restive..."

"Listen!" Isobel leaned forward.

"What's that?... something rustled just under the terrace..."

She leaned back, suppressing a scream. Vinckers' voice said from the other side of the balustrade that ran along the rim of the terrace: "Hands up, Crewe. I've got you covered."

Sandy swung round to see the glint of light on a rifle barrel shoved in between the cement pillars that supported the broad rail of like substance. Evidently Vinckers had dropped down from the verandah outside his room, then crept silently to where the two were sitting. The terrace was raised about four feet from the sandy turf beneath, so that by crouching Vinckers was able to keep under cover.

"Shoot if you think it worth your while," Sandy said contemptuously and without moving his hands from where they rested on the arms of his wicker chair. "My crowd will hear the shot, and you're not apt to last long after that."

"I'll take a chance on it if you move," Vinckers said, and rose. "Go frisk him, Jarve."

The younger man came up over the parapet with an agile agility previously unrevealed by his languid movements. With hands so deft as to suggest a familiarity in their exploration of other people's pockets he palpatized Sandy's person, then said briefly: "Nothin' on him, Vinck."

Sandy gave a short, cutting laugh. "Some big game hunter, I'll say. Well, no self-respecting tiger would ever eat you, anyhow, Vinckers. It would take a hyena."

Isobel laughed. "Or a turkey buzzard or vulture. At least that shot is now accounted for without much further doubt."

"That was merely a rather childish effort to send him back aboard his boat where he belongs," Vinckers said. "If I'd wanted him I'd have got him. The magazine was full. This is merely a precaution."

"Against what?" Sandy asked.

"To keep you from trying to start anything. For your own sake as much as mine," Vinckers answered.

"And what the devil should I want to start?" Sandy asked. "It begins to look as if your conscience was uneasy about something, Vinckers. Or that you might have a little property in your possession you feel you may need to guard."

"Such as what?" Vinckers muttered.

"Oh, let's say a document... or other papers... or possibly jewels."

"Well, I have 'em. It merely struck me that you might take it into your head to curtail my liberty of action. Sometimes a lover harbors suspicions that are quite unwarranted."

"The alibi is weak," Sandy said. "In fact one might suspect it was advanced to change the topic, and to draw our minds from what I have just suggested. That would not have occurred to me if it had not been for this desperate urgency to frisk me... which has drawn blank. But since it has happened, I am beginning to wonder..."

"Well, what?" Vinckers demanded angrily, as Sandy paused.

"Whether you haven't the jewels after all. Since you've taken such pains to put the idea into my head, I seem to cling to it."

"You needn't then," Vinckers snapped. "The Rajah would have had to be a lot nuttier than he is to have left jewels or valuable documents in that old tin-ditty-box of his when his needy children were paying him a filial visit."

"I wasn't thinking of your looting the Colonel's safe," Sandy said, "but of your looting the Colonel himself."

Vinckers was silent for an instant, then asked harshly: "And how could we have looted the Colonel when he set out for parts unknown aboard an elephant that has the playful habit of stripping anybody that annoys him?"

DAVIS AND COX READY TO BATTLE AT ARENA

TRENTON, Apr. 28.—Two bruisers of matdom will face each other tonight at the Arena when Dynamite Joe Cox, burly Missouri farmer, and Wee Willie Davis, 260 pound Virginia giant, clash in the feature best two fall out of three, 90 minute time limit event on Matchmaker Johnny Ipp's weekly wrestling show.

Davis and Cox came through last week's bout at the Arena with flying colors. Cox made the more impressive showing of the two by downing Wally Dusek in two falls after losing the first fall. Davis fought a brilliant draw with Joe Dusek. It was a wild, thrilling battle from start to finish as both men tried every illegal trick in their repertoire to achieve victory. In previous matches Davis defeated huge Floyd Marshall and Sandor Vary to become one of the most unpopular grapplers hereabouts.

One of the most interesting matches of the current season should result when these two behemoths tangle.

A corking supporting card bringing to Trenton several new faces will precede the main event. Abe Coleman, sawed-off Hebrew drop-kick expert, will face the veteran Johnny Supsie, in the 30 minute time limit semi-windup.

Les Ryan, rough-house Irishman, meets a newcomer, Joe Montana, Camden heavyweight and George Harben Georgia cracker, will test Sid Marcus, Boston Jewish grappler.

The first bout will start at 8:45 p. m., 15 minutes later than usual due to the change to daylight saving time.

DOYLESTOWN, Apr. 28.—Horsemen from several counties and from New Jersey will attend the seventeenth annual banquet of the Doylestown Driving Club to be held at the Water Wheel Tavern, Doylestown, on Thursday night, April 29, at 6:30. Plans for the 1937 harness racing season and for the annual Doylestown Fair will be discussed at the dinner, as well as the progress that is being made in the state concerning legislation that would legalize betting on horse races in Pennsylvania.

LOSE OUT IN DEBATE

DOYLESTOWN, Apr. 28.—In the Pennsylvania state high school debating contest, Doylestown High's crack team that won the county and district titles, lost out in competition in the first round of the state title to Tyrone High School, at Altoona. Four of the boys on the team forfeited their annual trip to Washington in order to debate in the State championships.

OBSERVE ANNIVERSARY

DOYLESTOWN, Apr. 28.—The fiftieth anniversary of the St. Tammany Castle No. 173, Knights of the Golden Eagle, was celebrated here last night. The organization has two living charter members, one of whom, Burroughs

Michener, of Doylestown, was present last night.

Local Epworth League Marks Anniversary

Miss Anna Heritage, toastmistress, invoked the blessing, and group singing was led by Harold Coons at intervals during the banquet.

The program was opened with a saxophone solo by Harold Coons, "Song of India," accompanied by Miss Caroline Betz.

Doron Green was then called upon, at which time he gave a brief outline of the origin of the League and its organizing during the pastorate of the Rev. E. E. Buriss.

A few charter members being present, they were asked to rise, namely: Mr. and Mrs. Doron Green, Mrs. Mary Poole, and Miss Elizabeth Neisser.

Mrs. George Miller, Frankford, was the next called upon for a few words, she being a former member of the church, and a very active member of the League.

Mrs. Heritage introduced the president, Miss Carrie Rapp, who gave a few words of welcome. This was followed by the introduction of the entire cabinet.

Miss Mary Smoyer sang "Little Old Lady," with Miss Betz at the piano.

Miss Heritage then introduced the speaker of the evening, the Rev. A. B. Davidson, pastor of the Methodist Church at Doylestown. The Rev. Davidson, in his very jovial manner, delivered a most inspiring address, taking many of his thoughts from the Epistle of James. He told of his childhood life with the Epworth League at Louisville, Ky., and incidents all through his life with League work. In conclusion, he brought to minds of those present, comparison of their life work as to a road under construction, driving at one's own risk.

Mr. Coons concluded with a saxophone solo, "Saxema." The program ended with group singing "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," followed by the League benediction.

The menu consisted of: Tomato juice cocktail, roast turkey, dressing, gravy, mashed potatoes, peas, cranberry jelly, celery, olives, rolls, butter, ice cream, fancy cakes, mints and coffee.

Activities of Past Week Occurring at Capital hands of the county treasurer . . . The Democrats decided in caucus to pass both measures as they stood on the floor and instructions for affirmative voting were closely adhered to in the milk measure, which passed by an overwhelming majority.

But, the Democratic members threw instruction and pleadings of Gov. George H. Earle for passage to the four winds when the Moomaw-Moran proposal was called up for final passage . . . Rep. Leo H. Achterman, D., Monroe, was first to take the floor and he told the House membership that there was a bill in the Senate, which soon to reach the lower chamber, which provided for cutting the cost of county government by reducing the salaries of tax collectors but "would not crucify these office holders by abolishing their jobs altogether" . . . Stating this as his reason, the gentleman from Monroe asked to have the bill tabled . . . In a vain effort to save the measure Democratic floor leader Herbert Cohen, York, took the floor but was refused the privilege of debating the merits of the bill . . . The House then voted 163 to 91 to table.

On both of these lively issues the Bucks-Montgomery County delegations stuck pretty much to party lines . . . The milk tally found all seven of the B-M representatives on the affirmative side . . . and on the Moomaw-Moran bill all voted to table the measure, including Rep. Hiram Ganser, Montgomery County Democrat.

Recurrence of flood emergencies in the Commonwealth this week and the urging of anxious constituencies that their members "do something about these floods," caused a little talk among members of the House minority relative to the Stockham resolution memorializing Congress to appropriate Federal funds for a $350,000,000 flood control and water transportation program in Pennsylvania . . . The measure is still in committee and from all outward appearances is destined to remain there for "pickling" purposes.

The Senate took up the flood cause, however, by giving final passage to the Weiss resolution calling for a constitutional amendment which would permit floating of a $50,000,000 bond issue for flood control work in the Commonwealth . . . The action is of little immediate consequence nevertheless, for in order to put into practical use the proposal must be passed by the current and the next session of the Legislature after which the electorate of the state is given a chance to decide on it by ballot.

Still in Senate committee, meanwhile, was an appropriation bill which would furnish $5,000,000 for the purpose of purchasing land and paying damages on immediate construction sites . . . As originally proposed the measure would have provided $5,000,000 for work on three dams planned by army engineers in the Ohio River watershed . . . However, it was amended in the House to provide $8,000,000 with the stipulation that half the amount be expended in Eastern and Central Pennsylvania . . . The Senate committee, International News Service learned, plans to report out the bill as it was originally introduced.
